WHY THIS CONVERSATION MATTERS

Across Asia and the Pacific, increasingly complex climate and disaster risks call for professionals who can connect policy, evidence, finance and practical action. Governments, institutions and businesses need specialized, practice-oriented learning to strengthen climate action, reduce disaster risks and support resilient investments.

A SHARED INITIATIVE FOR 2027

The Asian Disaster Preparedness Center (ADPC) and Durham University Business School, United Kingdom, are exploring a partnership to develop and deliver specialized, short courses in 2027 — combining academic expertise with ADPC's regional practitioner experience and networks.

WHAT WILL THE WEBINAR EXPLORE?

- Emerging professional competencies for climate action and disaster resilience
- Carbon markets and Article 6 cooperative mechanisms
- Climate finance and developing bankable climate actions
- Methods and evidence for assessing loss and damage from climate risks
- Flexible options for continuing professional development

WHY PARTICIPATE?

- Hear perspectives from academic and practitioner experts
- Share regional capacity-development priorities and skills needs
- Explore new professional learning pathways
- Identify opportunities for institutional and academic collaboration
- Help inform the thematic focus and development of the 2027 courses

WHO SHOULD JOIN?

- Government ministries & disaster management authorities
- Universities & research institutions
- Development partners & UN agencies
- Climate & disaster resilience practitioners
- Financial institutions & private-sector organizations
- NGOs & professional networks

UNIVERSITIES & INSTITUTIONS ACROSS ASIA AND THE PACIFIC: You are especially encouraged to participate, share institutional perspectives, identify priority learning needs and explore opportunities to contribute academic expertise, regional knowledge and professional networks.
